Crossing the Bridge

Satyananda Gabriel

Crossing the Bridge Satyananda Gabriel

In this remarkable second collection of poetry, Satyananda Gabriel writes of loss, transformation, metaphysics, crossing social boundaries and/or being battered on the borderlines of constructed cultural spaces, and the struggles that arise in a society where individuality/freedom/identity is expressed in consumption, while the power to shape social ecology is subsumed to the machinery and regimentation of corporate life and conformity. Many of these poems speak to the overdetermined complexity of the individual in the "post-modern" present (and past) where natural and supernatural, science and superstition, reason and romanticism intersect and interact. These subjects occupy unique and ephemeral moments in space-time and struggle to reject, retain or restore identities shaped by social stereotyping, as well as by shared concepts, experiences, and constantly changing constellations of fluid and fragile memories.
